Hi [REDACTED] I hope you at least enjoy reading my book! As I mentioned earlier, the manuscript is in the Publishers hands, Simon and Schuster, and he still has to send it to the copy editor for all the spelling and grammar changes. Thanks for all your help and i do hope you enjoy reviewing my book.....Joaquin "Jack" Garcia

We need to explain right up front that public source with is ok, otherwise for rules apply.

Let's work with him to start getting the personal permissions, etc. Also, I believe the LCO unit needs to do a quick scrub to see if this compromises any cases.

H/U needs to look for informants.

Camden Councilman Sentenced to 20 Months in Federal Prison for Extortion (More)

CAMDEN – Former Camden City Councilman Ali Sloan El was sentenced today to 20 months in federal prison for accepting $36,000 in bribes in exchange for steering Camden redevelopment work to a contractor, U.S. Attorney Christopher J. Christie announced.

U.S. District Judge Joseph Rodriguez also ordered Ali Sloan El, 53, of Camden, to serve three years of supervised release upon the completion of his prison sentence. Judge Rodriguez continued the defendant's release on an unsecured personal recognizance bond pending his surrender to the Federal Bureau of Prisons by July 19.

On Aug. 30, 2006, a three-year South Jersey corruption investigation resulted in guilty pleas to extortion from Camden City Council member Ali Sloan El and Atlantic City Council president Craig Callaway, both of whom admitted that they accepted bribes from a contractor, in exchange for municipal contracts; the contractor, Terry Jacobs of Pleasantville, pleaded guilty to an unrelated drug conspiracy charge.

During his guilty plea before Judge Rodriguez, Sloan El admitted taking approximately $36,000, in six different payments between 2003 and 2005, in exchange for steering Camden redevelopment work to Jacobs. The promised projects included concrete, sidewalk and other construction work, including a Cooper's Ferry Development Association project and parking for the New Jersey Aquarium.

"Sloan El posed as an honest man of the people who wanted to cure Camden's ills," Christie said. "His guilty plea and sentence reveal that in fact he was a fraud who sold his office for personal gain. Like too many others before him, Sloan El's conduct reinforces the most cynical view of New Jersey citizens that public officials are in office to serve themselves."

Callaway, 48, of Atlantic City, admitted he also took approximately $36,000 in six different payments between 2003 and 2005, in exchange for using his position to assist Jacobs in obtaining construction work in Atlantic City projects. Those projects included development of the Garwood Mills site, a 6.4-acre waterfront site on the northeast inlet of Atlantic City. On March 13, 2007, Judge Rodriguez sentenced Callaway to 40 months in prison and ordered him to pay a fine of $1000.

Jacobs, 42, a contractor in Atlantic City, Camden and elsewhere, pleaded guilty to an unrelated drug offense, admitting to conspiring to distribute more than five kilograms of cocaine in Gloucester County on Jan. 30, 2004. During his guilty plea, Jacobs further admitted paying bribes – independently and later as a cooperating witness for federal authorities – to public officials including Callaway and Sloan El in exchange for preferential treatment on city contracts. Jacobs is scheduled to be sentenced on May 2, along with two additional Atlantic City councilmen who pleaded guilty to accepting bribes.

On Oct 4, 2006, Atlantic City Council members Ramon Rosario, 48, and Gibb Jones, 79, admitted they accepted bribes in exchange for their official influence in the awarding of city development contracts. Rosario admitted taking a total of $14,000 in bribes from between August 2004 and November 2004. Jones admitted that he accepted more than $5,000 in regular cash payments in 2003 from a businessman seeking city development contracts for an associate.

In determining Sloan El's sentence, Judge Rodriguez consulted the advisory U.S. Sentencing Guidelines, which provide appropriate sentencing ranges that take into account the severity and characteristics of the offense, the defendant's criminal history and other factors. The judge, however, was not bound by those guidelines in determining a sentence. Parole has been abolished in the federal system. Defendants who are given custodial terms must serve nearly all that time.

Christie credited Special Agents from the Federal Bureau of Investigation, under the direction of Acting Special Agent in Charge Pedro Ruiz, in Newark, with the ongoing investigation.

The case was prosecuted by Assistant U.S. Attorneys Thomas J. Eicher and Judith H. Germano, both of the U.S. Attorney's Office, Special Prosecutions Division in Newark.

Subject: RE: Jack Garcia Project

b6 -1.-2

Dear [REDACTED]

b6 -1

As I pledged to you, we have given Mr. Garcia's manuscript our top priority. In our note, we told Mr. Garcia that our goal was to complete the review by December 7, 2007. While this has been largely accomplished, there certain issues that remain to be resolved. Resolution of these issues remains our highest priority.

While sympathetic to the financial aspects in providing the manuscript to the publisher as soon as possible, the FBI must ensure that the manuscript does not compromise sensitive law enforcement techniques, on-going investigations, the identities of confidential sources and law enforcement officers, and law enforcement capabilities. I'm certain that Mr. Garcia appreciates the importance in safeguarding such sensitive information.

In view of your e-mail, we can proceed in one of three manners. If you want to submit the manuscript now to the publishers, then I will provide you with a list of information, including those matters unresolved, that must be deleted from the manuscript in order to obtain FBI approval. To be clear, the manuscript as submitted to the FBI is not approved for publication. Second, we can continue to clarify comments we received from the substantive divisions, keeping this project as our top priority. Third, should you decide that the manuscript will be submitted "as is" to the publisher, I will move this issue to FBI's Office of General Counsel.

Sincerely,

David Hardy

Subject: Public Information on Undercover Agent Michael McGowan

'Scenario' or 'lie'? At mob trial, there's no coming to terms
Joseph Merlino's lawyer and a prosecution witness traded differing interpretations of words and actions.<

By George Anastasia INQUIRER STAFF WRITER

Source: Philadelphia Inquirer, The (PA); 510 words

Published: 2001-06-02

Section: PHILADELPHIA | Page B03 | Edition: CITY-D

The defense attorney called it a "lie."

The undercover FBI agent said it was a "scenario."

Whatever the label, it was clearly the start of an investigation that led to drug charges against reputed mob boss Joseph "Skinny Joey" Merlino.

For six hours yesterday, jurors in Merlino's federal racketeering case watched as a war of words played out in U.S. District Court, where undercover FBI agent Michael McGowan was grilled by Edwin Jacobs Jr., Merlino's lawyer.

Jacobs, as he has throughout the 10-week-old trial, insisted that his client was talking about stolen property, not drugs, in several recorded conversations that prosecutors contend show Merlino authorized two cocaine transactions.

The drug deals were completed in the spring of 1999 in Boston, where McGowan was posing as a corrupt owner of an import-export business. Four Boston-area mobsters with ties to the Philadelphia crime family were picked up on audiotape and videotape negotiating and completing the drug deals.

In one, 2 kilograms of cocaine was sold to McGowan for $50,000. In another, a kilo was delivered for $24,000.

But Jacobs, through his cross-examination, argued yesterday that the FBI "concocted a lie" to lure Merlino into the drug deal even after Merlino was picked up on tape in Philadelphia twice warning an associate to stay away from the drug trade.

"You call it a 'lie'; I prefer to call it a 'scenario,'" McGowan said, while conceding that he posed as a corrupt businessman who dealt in stolen property and in cocaine when he was introduced to Robert Luisi, a Boston wiseguy tied to Merlino.

McGowan, a veteran undercover agent, said it is standard FBI procedure to create such scenarios for undercover operations.

Merlino and six codefendants are being tried on racketeering charges that include murder, attempted murder, gambling, extortion, and dealing in stolen property. Merlino is the only defendant charged in the cocaine deals.

Luisi and three of his associates have pleaded guilty to drug-trafficking charges.

Under questioning by Jacobs, McGowan admitted that he had numerous conversations with Luisi about stolen property, including furs, diamonds, Rolex watches, jewelry, televisions, cigarettes and razor blades.

He also said he gave Luisi a Rolex watch and five women's fur coats during an early phase of the undercover operation in order to solidify his position as a person who dealt in stolen property.

But he insisted, as he has throughout his three days of testimony, that Luisi went ahead with the cocaine deals only after he received approval from Merlino.

While the trial day opened with Jacobs and McGowan sparring over the difference between a "lie" and a "scenario," it ended with a debate over what was meant when Merlino told Luisi in April 1999 to "help that guy out."

McGowan said Luisi told him that was the "green light" he needed from Merlino to go forward with the cocaine deals.

But Jacobs, after pointing to different references to stolen property in several conversations around that same time, said: "You don't know what anybody was talking about in these conversations, do you?"

McGowan is expected back on the stand for more cross-examination when the trial resumes Monday.

Good Morning. I am [redacted] Coordinator of the Prepublication Review Office. My office's function is to review intended publications by current/former FBI employees to determine if the employee has included information obtained during FBI employment, which should not otherwise be released. Examples would be classified information, Rule 6e, sensitive techniques, pending investigations or prosecutions, personal privacy info, FBI information not available to the general public through means such as FOIPA, the media or court records, etc. b6 -2

As is more common than not, it is necessary that we call upon FBI "subject matter experts" to review the submissions of current/former FBI employees as the subject matter at issue is beyond the general expertise of my employees. It is in that regard, that I am contacting you.

I am forwarding to you a copy of a manuscript written by Joaquin "Jack" Garcia entitled, "Making Jack Falcone", which I would like for you to assign to someone in your Unit for review. Since "Jack" was in very deep cover in this operation, we are being very cautious in our review prior to providing approval.

General Rules-We have 30 business days (from September 5, 2007) to respond to the author. If your review will require additional time, please advise in a timely manner so that we may advise the author of the necessity for a deadline extension. In addition, as the material is proprietary information, it is not to be disclosed/shared beyond those persons involved in the review process.

Please give me a call or email me if you have any questions.

Thank you.

There is also mention of members of the Gambino LCN Family who are listed or not listed by the FBI in our LCN organizational charts. As such, the LCN Unit concurs with USOU that this needs to be cleaned up. Thanks.

Subject: Former FBI Special Agent Garcia - Book Review by OC Section

UNCLASSIFIED
NON-RECORD

Hi.

The OC Section is responding to the request from RMD to review former FBI Special Agent Garcia's book prior to approval for publication.

Attached is the Organized Crime Section's review of former FBI Special Agent Joaquin Garcia's book. The words/segments/portions that should be deleted are marked in blue. A follow-up explanation is provided in red. Since many references are made to undercover agents/undercover techniques and public corruption investigations, the OC Section is forwarding this document to USOU and the Public Corruption Section for review/comments. Also, the OC Section is providing a copy of its comments to OGC due to the mention of the ongoing Royal Charm and Smoking Dragon investigations mentioned throughout the book.

These are the primary issues: << File: Book Review.doc >>

1. Information not released to the public concerning the Royal Charm and Smoking Dragon investigations. As explained throughout the document, these are ongoing cases which involve current source activity, grand jury testimony, trial preparation, etc. Mr. Garcia's statements regarding the two cases identifies the true identity of undercover agents and provides information not released to the public.
2. Identification of former and current FBI Special Agents and identification of true name former and current Undercover Special Agents.
3. Identification of potential FBI sources
4. Identification of public corruption FBI investigations.

Let me know if anyone has any questions.

Suspect shoots himself before FBI capture Man believed to have robbed 12 grocery store banks in summer

Date: September 25, 1998 Publication: The Atlanta Journal and The Atlanta Constitution Page Number: C02
Word Count: 352

A man authorities believe robbed 12 supermarket banks in the metro area this summer shot himself in the head Thursday after the FBI's SWAT team surrounded his apartment. Pat Johnson, chief of the Atlanta bureau's bank robbery fugitive squad, identified the man as Jeff Williams, 31. He was carried to Grady Memorial Hospital, where he was listed in critical condition late Thursday. "He almost always robbed banks in groceries," Johnson said.

BY THOMAS ZAMBITO
 DAILY NEWS STAFF WRITER

The man who infiltrated the mob gained more than 80 pounds in his first two years - learning that the GoodFellas were more like FatFellas, eating their way through New York. On their menu every day were steaks, pasta and fresh seafood.

They dined at places like La Villetta in Larchmont, Westchester, where they contemplated the pork tenderloin with Portobello balsamic reduction or risotto with porcini and white truffle oil.

When they felt like red-blooded meat eaters, they would go to the Ye Olde Tollgate Steakhouse in Mamaroneck, also Westchester, a place the New York Times once wrote had "steak that a sumo wrestler would love."

When they wanted less-fussy Italian, they would hit Spaghetti Western in Bronxville, where they ate under an Italian poster of "The Good, The Bad and The Ugly."

And in just 24 months the once-svelte undercover FBI agent Joaquin Manuel Garcia suddenly found himself needing pants with a wider waist - much wider.

Even the judge at the trial of Gambino mobster Greg DePalma commented yesterday on the agent's portly appearance.

"Were you slim before you started this case?" Manhattan Federal Judge Alvin Hellerstein asked the hefty agent after listening to two days of his secretly-recorded mealtime chats with DePalma.

"I gained a good 80 pounds in this case," said the retired FBI agent whom DePalma and his cronies knew only as "Jack Falcone."

"I did a lot of eating, Your Honor," he said.

With the judge's permission, Garcia later dodged a question from defense attorney Martin Geduldig, who wanted to know just how high he tips the scales.

It was indeed a nonstop smorgasbord for two chowhounds, with the tab picked up by the FBI. DePalma's attorneys say Garcia even occasionally ordered a plate for the road.

But with each mouthful, the agent dubbed "a modern-day Donnie Brasco" was gaining the trust of a veteran mob capo and piecing together a racketeering case that would lead to the indictment of nearly three dozen accused wiseguys.

Garcia played the role so convincingly that in October 2004, DePalma told him he wanted to induct him "ASAP" into the mob family once headed by the Dapper Don, John Gotti.

"Well, I appreciate that buddy," Garcia told the 74-year-old DePalma.

"I mean, you want it, right?" DePalma asked.

"Yeah, of course, I'm honored for that. ... I will never let you down, either."

DePalma schooled Garcia into how he would introduce him to his mob pals.

"I will say Jack is my friend," DePalma told him. "Now, if he was a GoodFella, I would say Jack is a friend of ours. That means you're a made guy."

DePalma's voracious appetite extended to the diamond rings and Rolex watches Garcia gave DePalma to cement the ruse that he was an accomplished "fence" from Miami.

In February 2005, Garcia was with DePalma and mobster Robert Vaccaro when Vaccaro delivered a vicious beating on soldier Peter (Petey Chops) Vicini in a Westchester Bloomingdale's.

"Robert then grabbed a candlestick that was made out of solid glass and hit Vicini over the head," Garcia testified. "Blood started gushing out."

Vicini followed them onto an escalator as Vaccaro threatened to stab him.

"Come on, let's get out of here or we're gonna take a pinch," Garcia told them. After that, Garcia said he thought DePalma trusted him less because he didn't join the beating. The FBI operation ended a month later.

Mob bookie guilty of bro-in-law slay

A silver-haired bookie for the Genovese crime family was convicted yesterday of murdering his unstable brother-in-law in Brooklyn last year.

Relatives and supporters of the defendant, Andrew Gargiulo, 67, gasped and wept after the jury announced the verdict.

Gargiulo's attorneys had argued that their client had stabbed Preston Geritano in April 2004 in self-defense after Geritano smacked him with a stickball bat at Amici's - a popular Bay Ridge restaurant they co-owned.

INFORMANT SUES TO GET PAID SAYS FBI OWES HIM AT LEAST 150G

By Jim Smith, Daily News Staff Writer

Source: Philadelphia Daily News (PA); 522 words

Published: 1995-04-04

Section: LOCAL | Page 51 | Edition: PM

An admitted bookmaker who received a $100,000 reward from the FBI in 1993 for informing on major Philadelphia drug traffickers is claiming that the FBI owes him an additional $150,000.

"For six years I worked with the FBI undercover to help them arrest . . . major drug dealers from Puerto Rico, New York, Miami, Philadelphia, Los Angeles, New Jersey," noted the informant, Juan A. Rodriguez.

"The FBI told me I would get up to 25 percent of money, property seized," he added in a lawsuit he filed last year without the assistance of a lawyer, contending that the seizures totaled at least $1 million.

"I want justice done," Rodriguez added, demanding he be paid at least an additional $150,000. Rodriguez says that when he asked an agent whom he had worked with why he hadn't been paid the full 25 percent, the agent told him, "The front office was cheap."

U.S. District Judge J. Curtis Joyner recently transferred Rodriguez's lawsuit to the U.S. Claims Court in Washington, but the file was sent back to Philadelphia last week to give Rodriguez time to appeal the transfer.

Federal authorities deny shortchanging Rodriguez, but so far no one had disputed much of what Rodriguez says in the lawsuit about his role as a key FBI informant in the local drug wars.

In addition to the $100,000 reward, Rodriguez also received nearly $85,000 from the FBI to cover expenses, including rent, utilities, food, transportation, clothing, child support, medical and dental bills and other miscellaneous living expenses for a six-year period, according to court records.

Rodriguez became an informant in 1987, after being caught in a drug deal.

In 1987, the FBI had just gotten the power to investigate drug trafficking and agents offered Rodriguez a way to avoid prison: He could become the first informant to work for the FBI under cover in Philadelphia to infiltrate Hispanic drug networks.

PREPUB-5650

11/27/2007

"Rodriguez was a bookmaker who had numerous large betting clients in the North Philadelphia area, virtually all of whom were significant cocaine traffickers," wrote Assistant U.S. Attorney David E. Fritchey in a memorandum filed in court.

"The concept was that Rodriguez would offer money laundering services in which he would exchange new clean sequentially serialized $100 bills from the Federal Reserve Bank for old bills of small denominations that typically were used to buy cocaine either wholesale or retail," the prosecutor added.

In exchange for the new bills, which were easier to move out of the country, since they were more compact and free of any drug residue that a drug-sniffing police dog might detect, the dealers paid Rodriguez a 1 percent commission.

The dealers, some of whom had connections to drug cartels in Colombia, weren't aware that Rodriguez was secretly taping many of his conversations with them for the FBI for use later on as evidence of their crimes.

After Rodriguez's covert work ended in 1992, grand juries returned about two dozen indictments, charging 67 defendants with drug trafficking or money laundering crimes.

One group had laundered about $2 million through Rodriguez. A competing group laundered more than $1.5 million.

One defendant was acquitted. Forty-eight others were convicted.

Most of the remaining defendants, however, eluded capture by fleeing to Colombia.

THAT'S NO REFRIGERATOR, MY FRIEND, THAT'S A KILO OF COCAINE HUNDREDS OF FBI TAPES OFFERED A RARE LOOK AT A WORLD OF CODE WORDS, CRYPTIC REFERENCES AND ACCUSED TRAFFICKERS WHO LOVED TO TALK. \

By David Zucchino, INQUIRER STAFF WRITER

Source: Philadelphia Inquirer, The (PA); 1353 words

Published: 1992-06-14

Section: EDITORIAL REVIEW & OPINION | Page E01 | Edition: FINAL

The cocaine wasn't even white. It was yellow. Yellow! It was foul-looking stuff.

The people in Philadelphia who agreed to buy the 18-kilogram shipment in June 1990 wanted an exchange - or at least a discount. In a series of calls from a cellular phone in North Philadelphia, they wheedled and whined and bartered. But the suppliers didn't want to hear it. They wanted their money - $31,000 per kilo. They had been waiting too long.

"It has been a month. Can you imagine? No!" the middleman who arranged the sale told the buyers over the phone. "It's going to be a mess. . . . It's going to be a pile of s- because all of us have responsibility."

A few miles away, on the ninth floor of the federal building in downtown Philadelphia, FBI agents were eavesdropping on the desperate cocaine broker. Their wiretap made for entertaining and illuminating listening - and helped build a series of federal indictments.

That animated conversation was one of 1,042 that the FBI and the Drug Enforcement Administration secretly recorded as part of a four-year case that produced indictments of 76 accused traffickers last month. They were charged with running the Philadelphia cell of the Cali, Colombia, cocaine cartel, importing six tons of cocaine between 1987 and 1990.

The wiretaps provide a rare insider's chronicle of how big-time cocaine deals are put together. They are laced with code words and cryptic references to cocaine shipments, stash houses, secret car compartments and huge money caches. They reveal the accused traffickers not as discreet businessmen, but as voluble hustlers who loved to talk, talk, talk.

With their own words, the accused dealers helped secure their arrests. Fearful of being monitored, they spoke in Spanish and in code. But they talked so much and in such detail on their high-tech cellular phones that they laid out a road map for investigators.

"These guys think they're smart, talking in code," said Paul D. Allen Jr., an FBI supervisor. "But it's kind of hard to have a normal conversation about '2 1/2 refrigerators.' You can only be so cute on the phone before the guy on the other end gets lost."

Authorities had to translate the tapes twice. Specialists in Colombian- accented Spanish translated the conversations into English. A retired DEA agent with experience in Caribbean drug trafficking interpreted the code words and slang.

Cocaine, for instance, went by many names: Newspapers. Girls. Houses for rent. Insurance. Cattle. Cars. Passengers. A family. Titles. Rice and potatoes.

And clothes, as in, "Yes, in a small suitcase to take those clothes to the laundromat."

And apparatuses, as in "300 expensive apparatuses."

The cash to pay for cocaine was not just money. It was receipts or titles for cars or fares or pesos or papers.

To negotiate prices, the accused dealers used clumsy codes. The most common involved numbered streets. For instance, one caller said he had been parked on Fifth Street but had moved up to Sixth. He meant the price of his cocaine had increased from $35,000 to $36,000 per kilo, the indictments said.

In one conversation, a buyer complained that "the shoes didn't fit the girl. . . . Her shoe size is 32 . . . and they sent too high a size." He meant that he intended to pay no more than $32,000 per kilo, the indictments said.

"You can't . . . can't come down a couple more sizes?" he asked.

In other negotiations, buyers and sellers dumped the code and spoke blatantly, according to the indictments.

"It's coming out four, uh, four small weights short. It weighed 32," a buyer said, trying to explain that the kilogram - about 36 ounces - he bought was light. Finally, he blurted out: "In other words, it has 32 ounces."

When one accused trafficker reported that his cocaine was ready for street sale, he was anything but subtle. "It's ready to be distributed," he announced. "It's in small bags."

Although some accused dealers stressed the need to speak only on pay phones, security seemed only a passing concern. In one conversation, an accused dealer gave out the pager numbers of two fellow dealers.

In another, a defendant casually mentioned that "this man from El Kibuk," a popular Caribbean restaurant on North Fifth Street, had bought cocaine at $29,000 per kilo, the indictment said.

Jose Luis Escobar, 53, owner of El Kibuk, was arrested in the May 6 roundup and charged with heading a Cuban drug ring that operated from the restaurant and arranged for distribution of Cali-supplied cocaine. Authorities seized the restaurant.

Attorney Guillermo L. Bosch said Escobar, who is being held without bail in federal prison, has pleaded not guilty. Fifty-two of the 76 people indicted have been arrested, with the rest still at large, authorities said.

- Agents said the wiretaps had been set up with the help of Juan Antonio Rodriguez, a cocaine middleman they "flipped" after he was charged with cocaine trafficking. Known as "Tony Oro" or Tony Gold for the gold jewelry he sold, Rodriguez agreed to become an undercover informant.

Rodriguez was set up with a phony jewelry business at Seventh and Cambria Streets, which he operated as an illegal gambling parlor patronized by cocaine dealers. With FBI help, he "laundered" $5 million in drug cash, changing small denominations into $100 bills.

The traffickers wanted big bills because they were easier to carry back to Colombia, said FBI Special Agent Jerry Peters. It once took them four duffel bags to carry $330,000 in small bills, agents said. In $100 bills, $330,000 would be about the size of a brick.

The traffickers insisted on new, sequentially numbered $100 bills to guarantee that the cash was free of cocaine residue that could be sniffed by police dogs.

Rodriguez told his dealer friends that he had bank "contacts," agents said. Actually, agents provided the $100 bills that he exchanged for the dealers' cash and a 1 percent commission.

Peters said Rodriguez had been paid $50,000 in commissions, which he turned over to authorities. He is now in the federal Witness Security Program.

On the wiretaps, the FBI said, accused traffickers gabbed away day and night on cellular phones, piling up huge phone bills they never paid. When the phone company cut them off, they said, the phone's owner would simply throw the phone away and buy a new one under a phony name.

Peters said the suspects would make 120 to 130 calls a day on a single phone, usually from North Philadelphia to contacts in New York, Miami and Colombia. Agents typically recorded 60 to 70 of those calls. Transcripts of the conversations, taped over a 25-week period, filled 12 two-inch-thick volumes, the FBI said.

Some of the defendants bragged about the quality of their products, according to the indictments. One said his people "deal in pure, pure, pure."

Another was asked: "Is the young girl pretty?"

He replied: "Yes, they are real, real presentable. Real pretty."

The talk wasn't always hype. Of the 30-some kilos undercover agents bought, Allen said, most were 90 percent pure.

One group of dealers wasn't as lucky, according to the indictments: They bought the bad "yellow" cocaine from a middleman who supplied it from a powerful group of traffickers. When the buyers balked at paying and also demanded a discounted price, the middleman and his partner started to worry.

"We have some people parked over there waiting for those receipts, man!" the middleman told one buyer, meaning his suppliers wanted their money.

The middleman's partner got on the line and added: "I have to fulfill a bunch of obligations here with the people. . . . Do you understand me? And I can't be on bad terms with these people."

The indictments do not explain how the problem was resolved. But they do indicate that disappointing Colombian suppliers is an unpleasant business.

In July 1990, one alleged trafficker was arrested and the nearly 60 kilograms of cocaine she was transporting were seized. Unfortunately for the middleman who had brokered the shipment, the buyers it was destined for had already paid for it.

"They are desperate, my love," the middleman told a confederate, according to the indictments. "You know there is a lot of money up front on that side!"

The middleman said he was dreading a phone call from his bosses in Colombia.

"I'm waiting for this call," he said. "In other words, I think I'm going to die."

AUTHORITIES CLAIM COCAINE RING DESTROYED 76 CHARGED IN OPERATIONS OF CALI CARTEL

By David Zucchino, INQUIRER STAFF WRITER
Source: Philadelphia Inquirer, The (PA); 927 words
Published: 1992-05-07
Section: LOCAL | Page B01 | Edition: FINAL

Federal authorities said yesterday they had broken up the Philadelphia cell of the Cali, Colombia, drug cartel, which agents said imported six tons of cocaine into the city between 1987 and 1990.

Seventy-six Puerto Ricans, Colombians and Cubans were charged in indictments and warrants with importing or selling cocaine supplied by the world's biggest cocaine cartel. If diluted and broken down into $10 and $20 street sales, the cocaine would be worth $750 million, agents said. Among those charged were alleged "managers" of the cell, which distributed Cali-supplied cocaine from New York and Miami to wholesalers in Philadelphia. Those wholesalers, who also were charged, in turn sold the cocaine to street gangs for corner sales, the indictments charged.

The bulk of the cocaine was sold in the section of North Philadelphia that some police have nicknamed the Badlands, agents said. Sam Billbrough, head of the Drug Enforcement Administration office in Philadelphia, said much of the cocaine seized in previous federal drug indictments in the area was supplied by the Cali cell.

Drug gangs in the Badlands are responsible for about 70 percent of all the illegal drugs sold in Philadelphia, according to the police Narcotics Field Unit. Many of those charged yesterday either lived in the area or ran cocaine operations from businesses they owned there, the indictments charged.

Authorities said the three-year undercover operation produced one of the most significant drug busts in the city's history. But they also acknowledged that the arrests would have little effect on the availability of cocaine sold on the streets of the city's poorest neighborhoods.

"This case . . . will significantly disrupt established channels of illegal distribution in the Philadelphia area," said U.S. Attorney Michael M. Baylson. But without reducing demand for cocaine, Baylson said, "we can lock these people up for years and years but, as everyone knows, drugs are still out there."

Billbrough said the arrests would "seriously wound" the local Cali cell.

But he added: "Is it going to stop drug trafficking in Philadelphia? The answer is no. Will some people (dealers) fill the void? Yes, but they won't be as well-organized as these people."

Forty-three of the 76 people charged - many of them illegal aliens - were arrested yesterday in Philadelphia, Puerto Rico, Miami and Los Angeles. Thirty-eight of those charged were from Philadelphia, agents said, with 23 in custody yesterday afternoon.

As part of the three-year investigation, agents tape-recorded thousands of Spanish-language phone conversations between alleged suppliers and cell managers. Those conversations are dotted with coded references to cocaine shipments, including "the family," "material," "newspapers," and "expensive apparatuses."

In one conversation, two alleged members of the cell referred to a cocaine shipment as "houses for rent." Trying to explain that some of the cocaine was of poor quality, one of the callers said: "Some of those apartments (are) somewhat damaged."

Some conversations referred to a 21-ton drug seizure in Los Angeles and a five-ton seizure in New York, both in 1989. Authorities said portions of those shipments were intended for the Cali cell in Philadelphia.

The cartel has cells in many major U.S. cities, according to the DEA.

Among those arrested yesterday was Jose Luis Escobar, 53, owner of the El Kibuk Restaurant at 4535 N. Fifth St. The indictment charged Escobar with heading a major Cuban drug ring that operated from his restaurant, arranging for distribution of Cali-supplied cocaine.

Escobar and his restaurant have been featured in articles in local publications, including The Inquirer. The restaurant was seized yesterday under federal drug-forfeiture laws.

Escobar's brother, Roberto Escobar of Miami, and Jose Escobar's son, Leonardo Escobar, 26, of Sewell, N.J., also were indicted.

The indictments said that most of the Cali-supplied cocaine reached Philadelphia from New York in cars outfitted with secret compartments. The same cars were used to ferry loads of cash - much of it "street money" made up of $10 and $20 bills - back to New York.

In a typical month, Baylson said, the Philadelphia cell would import 170 kilograms. At $25,000 per kilogram, the drugs were worth $4.25 million wholesale - and roughly five times that retail, agents said.

Some of the defendants also were charged with illegally laundering drug cash, often by setting up phony business fronts, many of them in North Philadelphia.

Baylson said some members of the cell had ties to the Scarfo organized-crime family, but he declined to provide details.

The Cali cartel, named for the Colombian city where it is based, has eclipsed the better-known Medellin cartel in recent years, agents say. Some officials say the Cali group supplies up to 80 percent of the cocaine reaching the United States.

The investigation produced 16 indictments, including a 373-page indictment charging 30 defendants. Eight people - four of them living or working in Philadelphia - were charged under the federal drug-kingpin statute, which carries a prison term of 20 years to life.

Four of those eight were in custody yesterday, agents said.

Authorities identified those who had been living or working in Philadelphia as Maritza Bravo, Gentil Navia Ruiz, Elkin Quiceno and Omar Ceron. No ages or addresses were available.

The federal government is seeking the forfeiture of $150 million in cash - the retail value of the cocaine it said was sold by the Philadelphia cell. Huge bundles of cash, along with kilograms of cocaine wrapped in heavy plastic, were displayed at a news conference yesterday at the William J. Green Jr. Federal Building.

Federal authorities also seized homes, businesses and other property in Philadelphia, Florida, Puerto Rico and California. At one house seized in San Juan, agents said, they recovered $540,000 in cash, three vehicles and two boats.

FEDS PUT CALI SALES AT $100M ADMIT ARRESTS OF 76 WON'T STEM THE FLOW

By Jim Smith, Daily News Staff Writer

Source: Philadelphia Daily News (PA); 655 words

Published: 1992-05-07

Section: LOCAL | Page 05 | Edition: PM

Cocaine by-the-pound was so plentiful in Philadelphia in 1990 that members of the Cali cartel, a major Colombian cocaine network, complained about the low price they were getting for bulk sales here, FBI wiretaps show.

Federal authorities yesterday announced that 76 persons reputed to be associates and customers of the cartel's local "cell," responsible for unloading six tons of cocaine here, have been put out of business. Authorities were confident the drug would no longer be sold by the network at places in the city, including El Kibuk, a popular Cuban restaurant and night club on 5th Street near Courtland in Hunting Park.

The club was seized yesterday and its owner, Jose Escobar, who celebrates his 54th birthday today, was among those arrested and charged with drug trafficking and money laundering, authorities said.

But there was little optimism that disrupting a network that allegedly sold about 370 pounds of cocaine inside the city each month for several years would in any way lessen the current supply of the drug.

"We can lock these people up for years and years," U.S. Attorney Michael M. Baylson said at a news conference in the U.S. Courthouse.

"The drugs are still out there," Baylson, the area's chief federal prosecutor acknowledged glumly.

A three-year undercover operation by FBI, Drug Enforcement Administration and U.S. Customs Service agents, assisted by local police and other agencies, led to the unsealing yesterday of 16 indictments.

Sam Billbrough, agent in charge of the DEA here, said the joint effort was "one of the single most significant drug operations ever conducted in the city."

The major case, with 30 defendants, mostly Colombians reputed to be cartel associates, involves cocaine deals totaling more than $100 million between January 1988 and December 1990, authorities said.

Joel Friedman and Albert Wicks, prosecutors with the U.S. Organized Crime Strike Force, said the group sold about 13,000 pounds of cocaine during this

PREPUB-5667

The drug was smuggled out of Colombia, usually to New York, and then transported to Philadelphia by couriers, authorities said.

There also were allegations that associates of the cartel and customers such as Escobar, the restaurant owner, who allegedly purchased pound quantities for resale, "laundered" more than $4 million in drug profits, unaware they were dealing with an informant.

The informant, Juan Antonio Rodriquez, is an admitted North Philadelphia bookie and drug dealer.

Working for authorities out of a storefront on Cambria Street under the name BT Express, Rodriquez exchanged crisp new $100 bills for bags of smaller notes delivered to him by drug dealers, usually in amounts of $100,000 at a time.

The new bills were easier to smuggle out of the country, easy to conceal, and had no traces of drugs to alert police dogs, said Assistant U.S. Attorney David Fritchey, a Strike Force prosecutor.

The drug dealers paid Rodriquez a 1 to 2 percent commission, and had the misfortune of discussing how they earned the money, unaware authorities were recording on video and audio tapes what they said for evidence.

Court authorized wiretaps also were put on defendants' telephones, and excerpts of the defendants' recorded conversations are recounted in the one 373-page indictment.

One reputed manager of the Philadelphia cell, Maritza Bravo, 29, was overheard telling an associate during a telephone conversation on July 26, 1990, that too much cocaine had been dumped on the Philadelphia market, the grand jury alleged.

"The apartments are being rented at 25," Bravo purportedly complained, using code to say the price of cocaine had dropped to $25,000 for 2.2 pounds, according to the grand jury.

Her customers also were recorded complaining, saying they were selling cocaine for just a little more than they were paying for it.

DEA spokeswoman Mary Vaira said 43 of the 76 defendants were in custody, including Bravo, Gentil Navia Ruiz, 43, Elkin Quiceno, 26, and Jaime Ramirez, all alleged to be drug kingpins facing life in prison.

Good morning,

[REDACTED] is on leave. I'm going to be off next week and will return on January 2nd. I know some of our deletions don't make sense, but they reflect concerns--although I can't be specific about what they are in some instances. I think you can put them together. Also, some of these issues may have already been worked out, I note one of them is not on [REDACTED] last paper. b6 -2

Here is what I see we are requesting.

I think this is parsed about as far as we can at this point. We would be looking for the information being presented by DoJ, at trial (transcript) or a statement from an AUSA that it was presented at trial, but newspaper articles, etc. are not sufficient.

If this does conform to your understanding with [REDACTED], then we can straighten it out on the 2nd. b6 -2

Seizure of over 4 million in counterfeit 'supernotes,' other contraband

Based on their exotic names alone - 'Smoking Dragon' and 'Royal Charm' -- somebody will surely make a movie about these two highly dangerous and successful undercover federal sting operations, which brought down a ring of at least 59 individuals who conspired to smuggle massive quantities of counterfeit money, weapons, drugs and other contraband into the United States.

Seized during the arrests made over the weekend of August 20, were more than four million dollars worth of highly deceptive counterfeit U.S. currency - "supernotes," 36,000 ecstasy pills and almost one-half kilo of crystal meth.

Officials also charged members of the busted crime organization with arms trafficking and conspiring to import more than a million dollar's worth of silenced pistols, submachine guns, assault rifles, and other weapons, including rocket launchers.

Federal agents also shut down an organization engaged in smuggling hundreds of millions of counterfeit cigarettes into the U.S.

The arrests and indictments yielded by Smoking Dragon and Royal Charm resulted from the coordinated work of the FBI and the Secret Service, with substantial assistance from numerous other federal, state and local law enforcement agencies.

Following the arrests, federal indictments were unsealed in Los Angeles and Newark, New Jersey, naming 87 individuals in the international smuggling and counterfeiting operation on charges including: violations of Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Organizations (RICO) statutes; dealing in counterfeit U.S. currency; narcotics trafficking; money laundering; conspiracy to defraud the United States; and illegal weapons trafficking.

In an effort to orchestrate the arrest of many of the subjects in the Newark investigation, the FBI prepared and sent invitations to a ruse "wedding" for one of the FBI undercover agents. Many of the subjects were arrested on Sunday, believing they were going to the wedding celebration.

"Those who traffic in illegal weapons and counterfeit and contraband cigarettes pose a danger to our communities and our nation," said ATF Deputy Director Edgar Domenech in a press release. "By partnering in investigations such as this one, we can bring together our investigative expertise and unique capabilities to attack this international criminal threat and safeguard the American people."

"This was a one-stop-shopping criminal organization that had the will and the means to smuggle virtually every form of contraband imaginable. For those reasons alone, the organization posed a serious homeland security threat that we are happy to close down today. This case demonstrates what can be achieved when law enforcement works together to combat such threats," said John P. Clark, Deputy Assistant Secretary for U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) at the Department of Homeland Security.

'Wedding' snares 10 smuggling suspects

They thought they were going to a yacht off Cape May. The FBI moved in as part of a worldwide probe.

FBI nabs 10 'guests' for fake wedding

By Troy Graham INQUIRER STAFF WRITER

Source: Philadelphia Inquirer, The (PA); 780 words

Published: 2005-08-23

Section: LOCAL | Page A01 | Edition: JERSEY

The FBI capped off a six-year international smuggling investigation by faking a wedding last weekend for two undercover agents and inviting suspects from all over the world to attend.

Ten of the "guests" were given limousine rides Sunday from their Atlantic City hotels purportedly to a wedding aboard a yacht off Cape May. The limos took a detour behind the FBI building in Northfield, N.J., where agents surrounded the cars and arrested the suspects.

"It was brilliant," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Stephen J. Taylor, who is chief of the terrorism unit for New Jersey. "I wish I could say I came up with the idea. It was a female undercover FBI agent who came up with it."

The arrests were part of a huge roundup that netted 59 of the 87 people indicted in federal courts in New Jersey and California on charges of smuggling cigarettes, drugs, guns and counterfeit U.S. currency. Fifty-seven people were charged in six indictments in New Jersey. That case will be prosecuted in federal court in Camden. Eleven of those 57 people - including four of the wedding guests, still wearing formal attire - appeared for bond hearings in Camden yesterday.

Most were of Chinese or Taiwanese decent, but there also was a dual Italian Canadian citizen and a Philadelphia man born in Israel. About half of the defendants are suspected of being in the country illegally, Taylor said.

U.S. Magistrate Joel B. Rosen said he would wait until all the defendants were assembled in Camden to hold an arraignment - probably not until mid-September.

The investigation began in November 1999, when FBI agents from the Atlantic City office went undercover and posed as members of the Mafia to meet with Chang Shan Liu and his wife, May, both of Gaithersburg, Md.

The Lius served as brokers for two Chinese citizens named as the ringleaders in the cigarette-smuggling operation, Taylor said. The ring had been importing cigarettes through Long Beach, Calif., but was looking for a new port of entry after several seizures there.

The undercover agents told the Lius they had contacts at Port Newark who could get shipments through customs. From December 2001 until last week, 21 shipments - containing 200 million counterfeit cigarettes - came through Newark with the help of the undercover agents.

Cigarettes made in China

The cigarettes were manufactured in several factories in mainland China to look like Newport and Marlboro brands. Customs officials in China were bribed to allow the shipments to leave, Taylor said.

Because the cigarettes were not taxed, they were sold throughout the country at prices as low as about half the price of legal cigarettes. The undercover agents handled delivery of the cigarettes to places and people specified by the Lius.

Most of the cigarettes were distributed in New York, New Jersey and Philadelphia, but some went as far as Chicago and even Canada. The FBI had the cigarettes tested to make sure they were no more toxic than other cigarettes before allowing them to be distributed.

Chang Shan Liu also was charged with importing counterfeit Viagra through Newark.

The investigation eventually branched into several other areas. A distributor in Chicago, for instance, asked to pay the undercover agents for the cigarettes in ecstasy pills instead of cash. He later introduced the agents to a Canadian man who sold the agents more than 12,000 ecstasy pills.

The undercover agents also began handling cigarette shipments for another man, Khanh "Keith" Tang, Taylor said. The agents asked Tang whether he had any connections for drugs, guns and counterfeit money.

Counterfeit currency

Tang took the agents to meet Jyimin "Jimmy" Horng in Phuket, Thailand. Horng eventually arranged to ship to Newark a total of $3.3 million in counterfeit currency - known as "super notes" because of the high quality of the bills. Super notes often are manufactured in North Korea.

Horng also sent 390 grams of crystal meth into the country and arranged a shipment of weapons. The agents selected the arms from a catalog they were provided. The $1 million shipment, which included rockets, silenced submachine guns and antitank missiles, would have arrived last month. The smugglers put off the arrival for a couple months because of the heightened security after the London terrorist bombings, Taylor said.

During the trip to Thailand the undercover agents brought along their "girlfriends," who were agents providing extra backup.

The "wedding" for one of the couples was announced about seven months ago.

"Invitations were sent out, a date was given and RSVPs were received from different points around the world," said U.S. Attorney Christopher J. Christie.

The wedding was set for the fictitious yacht Royal Charm, which was actually the FBI's operational name for the investigation.

Smuggler in global ring gets 11 years

The U.S. called Chang Shan Liu a leader in the Newark operation. He said he had done the bidding of others.

Article Text:

Chang Shan Liu was either a leader in an international smuggling ring, or a minor player swept up in a sprawling federal investigation.

Either way, he helped FBI agents whom he thought were members of the New Jersey Mafia import about 100 million counterfeit cigarettes from China through Port Newark.

The investigation, which started with a 1999 meeting between Liu and the undercover agents, lasted six years as the agents followed a global trail of crime that eventually included drugs, counterfeit U.S. currency, and heavy-arms dealing.

At his sentencing yesterday in U.S. District Court in Camden, Liu said he merely had followed the instructions of the agents and his contact in China.

"I am not a mastermind or an organizer at all," Liu said. "I truly regret what I did. I was foolish enough to say yes to the undercover agents."

Liu's attorney, Martin Schmukler, argued that his client should be allowed probation and house arrest so he could care for his wife, May, who suffered a debilitating stroke in 2004.

Instead, Judge Jerome B. Simandle gave Liu, 69, more than 11 years in prison.

12/7/2007

PREPUB-5680

Prosecutors said Liu and his wife had served as brokers for two Chinese citizens who led a smuggling operation.

The ring had been importing fake Marlboro and Newport cigarettes made in China through Long Beach, Calif. In the late-1990s, after several seizures there, the ring was looking for a new port.

The undercover agents told the Lius that they had contacts at Port Newark who could get shipments through customs. From December 2001 to August 2005, the Lius arranged for 13 shipments - about 100 million cigarettes - to arrive at Port Newark.

Agents delivered the cigarettes to places and people specified by the Lius, prosecutors said. Because they were not taxed, the cigarettes were sold at prices as low as half the price of legal cigarettes.

Most were distributed in New York, New Jersey and Philadelphia, but others went as far as Chicago and Canada. Agents had the counterfeit cigarettes tested to make sure they were no more toxic than legal cigarettes before delivering them.

The investigation began to branch out. In Chicago, for instance, a cigarette distributor offered to pay the agents in ecstasy pills instead of cash. He then introduced them to a Canadian man who sold the agents 12,000 doses of ecstasy.

The agents also began importing cigarettes for another man, Khanh "Keith" Tang. They later asked him whether he had any connections for drugs, guns and counterfeit money.

Tang took the agents to meet Jyimin "Jimmy" Horng in Phuket, Thailand. Horng eventually arranged to ship to Newark $3.3 million in counterfeit currency known as "super notes" because of the high quality of the bills. Super notes often are made in North Korea.

Horng also sent 390 grams of crystal methamphetamine into the country and arranged a shipment of weapons. The agents selected the arms from a catalog they were provided. The $1 million shipment included rockets, silenced submachine guns, and antitank missiles, but the weapons were not sent before the arrests were made.

Nearly 90 defendants were indicted in federal courts in Camden and California in 2005. Fifty-seven were charged in New Jersey, and about 45 of them have been convicted, Assistant U.S. Attorney Hallie Mitchell said.

Chang Shan Liu pleaded guilty in December to one count of racketeering conspiracy. Charges against his wife have been dismissed, largely because of her health.

"Mr. Liu was the one who had a foot in China and a foot in the U.S.," Simandle said. "That was unique among all these defendants."

Liu's alleged contact in China, Ching Ming Hsu, remains a fugitive. Horng, who pleaded guilty, is awaiting sentencing in Camden.

Eleven of the New Jersey defendants, including Chang Shan Liu, were arrested after they were invited to Atlantic City to attend a fictitious wedding between two of the undercover agents.

Agents sent limos to chauffeur the guests from their hotel to the wedding, supposedly to be held aboard a yacht. Instead, the limos drove to the FBI building in Northfield, where the suspects were arrested.

Schmukler said the staged wedding was not "the high-water mark in the administration of justice," and likened it to a perp walk for news cameras.

"This was not a publicity stunt," Mitchell responded. "It was a lure to bring in all these criminals from all over the country and the world."

b7E -3,-6

3. Although we have decided that the information regarding wiretap on the cell phone is releaseable, we still request that [redacted] should be withheld (information on [redacted]).

4. Regarding [redacted] there is a civil case that is still open. To resolve this issue, we request that you change [redacted] in the investigation.

5. We request again that you refrain from identifying [redacted]
[redacted]

Lastly, Mr. Hardy would like to discuss the "Royal Charm" issue with you in detail tomorrow, 12/19/2007. Please contact him at 202-324-3625.

Just to reiterate, we are in the home stretch for this manuscript.

Thank you.

Cell Phone Security

Submitted by AAA on Thu, 2007-11-22 19:48. Adapted from Earth First! Journal www.earthfirstjournal.org/article.php?id=303

Rumor has it that cell phones aren't very secure. Most cell phones nowadays have Global Positioning System (GPS) devices in them, and even older phones that don't can still be easily tracked by triangulating their signals to towers. Every time you call someone or someone calls you, information about your phone, their phone, and the start and stop times of the conversation is recorded. Word on the street is that the feds can even remotely turn on the microphone in your cell phone and use it to eavesdrop on nearby conversations, in some cases even when your phone is turned off, all without you knowing. This is why Earth First!ers often take the batteries out of their phones before sensitive meetings. I've often wondered how much of this is true and how much is the product of paranoid, security-culture junkies. Turns out, it's all true.

Introducing Roving Taps

Every security culture guide tells you not to discuss anything illegal over the phone because the phone might be tapped. Actually, you shouldn't discuss anything illegal if a cell phone is anywhere close by. Last November, the US Justice Department approved what are known as roving taps.

During a criminal investigation of members of the Genovese family, a major organized-crime syndicate, the FBI bugged restaurants where the mobster John "Buster" Ardito had meetings. When Ardito and his associates discovered three of the bugs, the feds changed their tactics and began using roving taps instead. An FBI affidavit written by Assistant US Attorney Jonathan Kolodner refers to the roving tap in Ardito's phone as a "listening device placed in a cellular telephone." The FBI also placed a roving tap in the cell phone of Peter Peluso, an accomplice of Ardito who later turned snitch. This was the first legal use of roving taps in the US.

A "listening device" could be referring to either the cell phone's software or its hardware. A cell phone is essentially a small computer. A hardware listening device would require the feds to get physical access to the cell phone to place a bug in it, sort of like placing a bug in an office. A software device would mean that either the cell phone's operating system has a built-in back door that can be used to activate its microphone or that the feds would install spyware on the phone, allowing the same thing. It is unclear how the FBI actually went about installing roving taps in Ardito's and Peluso's cell phones.

"Just How Secure Is Your Cellular Phone?"—a 1997 article in the National Reconnaissance Organization newsletter—has this to say: "A cellular telephone can be turned into a microphone and transmitter for the purpose of listening to conversations in the vicinity of the phone. This is done by transmitting to the cell phone a maintenance command on the control channel. This command places the cellular telephone in the 'diagnostic mode.' When this is done, conversations in the immediate area of the telephone can be monitored over the voice channel."

In addition, some cell phones can't be completely powered off without taking the batteries out. In an opinion arguing that roving taps are legal under federal wiretapping laws, US District Judge Lewis Kaplan said that roving taps "functioned whether the phone was powered on or off." Newer Nokia phones will turn themselves on if an alarm is set, and apparently they'll also turn themselves on to eavesdrop on your conversations.

How to Tell If Your Phone Has a Roving Tap

The following tips are from security expert Lauren Weinstein, who wrote about them on his blog (a video entitled, "Is Your Cell Phone Bugged?" explains these tips in detail, and is available on YouTube and Google Video).

Everything your phone does requires electricity, which it gets from its battery. Your battery runs out much faster when your phone is transmitting data than when it's not. If you notice that your phone's battery has been draining much faster than it normally does, and if you haven't been talking on it, this could be a sign that it's tapped:

Normally, when you talk on your cell phone for a long period of time, it becomes warmer. If your phone is heating up when you're not talking on it, it might mean that your microphone is recording audio to your phone's flash memory to be transmitted later on or that your phone is transmitting audio live.

There are two different types of cell phone services: Global System for Mobile Communications (GSM) and Code-Division Multiple Access (CDMA). The vast majority of the world's cell phones use GSM; in the US, all T-Mobile and Cingular phones use GSM. If you put a GSM phone close to speakers or other audio equipment, it will produce a buzzing noise if information is being transmitted. It's normal for your cell phone to create a brief buzzing noise in speakers every so often, but if there's continual buzzing and you're not making a phone call, this is a strong sign that your phone is transmitting audio without your consent. This will not work on Verizon and Sprint phones, however, because they use CDMA technology.

Your Cell Phone Is a Tracking Device

All new cell phones have GPS devices in them, which can be used to find the location—within feet—of a cell phone anywhere in the world. Cell phones are constantly communicating with towers to make sure the time is accurate, to check for messages and more, meaning that the exact locations of most cell phones are known at all times. The location of older phones that don't have GPS devices can also be determined with a process called triangulation, in which a reasonably accurate location can be determined by measuring the relative time delays in the signal from the phone to three different cell phone towers. The fugitive hacker Kevin Mitnick was located and arrested in 1995, when law enforcement triangulated his cell phone.

The Electronic Frontier Foundation (EFF), which is like the National Lawyers Guild of digital freedoms, has been involved in a series of legal cases regarding the government's tracking of cell phone locations without warrants or probable cause. If warrants and probable cause aren't necessary to track cell phone locations, the kind of information that the feds might be collecting is frightening. If you carry your phone with you wherever you go, and if many of your friends do as well, then the feds have the ability to create a map of associations. Not only could they know where you sleep at night and where you go during the day, but if they map your location along with every other cell phone user's, they will also be able to know who you hang out with and who you go to meetings with.

And even if the EFF wins, and it becomes illegal for cops to track cell phone's without warrants or probable cause, since when has the law ever stopped the police from repressing our movement?

What's an Activist to Do?

The answer is simple. Get rid of your cell phone. The EF! Journal has previously published a series of articles explaining the social and environmental reasons for not using cell phones (see EF!J July-August 2005). These articles have since been recompiled and distributed as a zine called Cell Phones Suck. Those reasons, combined with the security risks associated with owning a cell phone, should be enough for any activist. It's just not worth it.

Mikey Scars takes the stand against Junior Gotti http://realdeal-forum.com/forum/templates/AcidTech/images/lang_english/icon_quote.gif
August 31, 2006

Scarsdale mobster Gregory DePalma earned his captain's bars in the Gambino crime family by bringing a heavyweight West-chester construction company under the outfit's wing, a turncoat mafioso says.

John "Junior" Gotti promoted DePalma from soldier to acting capo in the 1990s after DeFoe Corp., a Mount Vernon-based highway construction firm, was "put on record" with the family, Michael "Mikey Scars" DiLeonardo said yesterday.

The former Gambino chieftain was testifying in U.S. District Court in Manhattan at Gotti's racketeering and extortion trial where, among other things, Gotti is accused of ordering an attack in 1992 on radio talk-show host and Guardian Angels founder Curtis Sliwa. Gotti, 42, says he left the Mafia life behind him after he was convicted of extortion with DePalma in 1999. Two previous trials ended in hung juries.

DiLeonardo also testified against DePalma in May at a trial where the 74-year-old admitted crime capo was convicted of racketeering. DiLeonardo agreed to testify after being arrested in 2002, and is testifying against Gotti, his former best friend, for the third time.

He said DePalma brought DeFoe's president, John Amicucci of Scarsdale, on board with the Gambinos after Amicucci had an affiliation with the Genovese family.

"Greg rounded 'em up and brought it to Junior," said DiLeonardo, who ran the crime family's construction rackets while John Gotti Jr. ran the family

Amicucci, who has long been dogged by allegations of organized-crime ties, was indicted in December 2004 on federal charges of bribing corrupt union officials from two locals of the International Union of Operating Engineers. He has consistently denied the organized-crime allegations. On Feb. 9, a federal jury cleared Amicucci of all charges.

His lawyer, Richard B. Herman, who successfully defended Amicucci in the bribery trial, assailed DiLeonardo's accusations as lies.

"This is pure fantasy in order for this individual, DiLeonardo, to gain favor with the government for the sole purpose of reducing or eliminating his prison sentence," Herman said. "Further, Mr. Amicucci does not know anyone named Mikey Scars and never associated with this puppet of the government."

DePalma was on secretly recorded tapes talking about extorting Amicucci, whom he referred to as "Daffy Duck," and alleged Gambino control of DeFoe.

Amicucci was not charged in the DePalma case and was not called to testify at the trial. Herman denied Amicucci's company was under DePalma's control, but admitted Amicucci knew DePalma.

"Everybody knew Greg DePalma," Herman said.

Gotti pleaded guilty in 1999 to extorting the Manhattan strip club Scores, along with DePalma and other reputed Gambinos, including DePalma's son, Craig.

Gotti and DiLeonardo's once tight friendship strained in the late 1990s, in part because of Gotti's involvement with the DePalmas. DiLeonardo didn't trust them.

After Gotti was arrested, he sent word to DiLeonardo that he was right about the DePalmas, DiLeonardo said.

"I had told him they were lying, scheming behind his back," DiLeonardo said.

Gotti was sentenced in U.S. District Court in White Plains to 77 months in prison and three years post-release supervision.

When federal prosecutors filed the latest indictment in May against Gotti in Manhattan, they asked a federal judge in White Plains to revoke Gotti's supervised release and return him to prison. That matter is pending before U.S. District Judge Stephen C. Robinson.

Gotti maintains that he quit the mob after his involvement with the DePalmas in the Scores case.

But DiLeonardo, who became a turncoat after he was arrested on murder and racketeering charges in 2002, testified yesterday that Junior Gotti continued to operate from behind bars. He said once you're in the Mafia, you're there for life.

"There's no such thing as retiring," he said.

Thursday, August 31, 2006

A former Eltingville mobster testified yesterday that John A. (Junior) Gotti pressured his teen-age son to keep him from becoming a federal informant.

Michael (Mikey Scars) DiLeonardo said, "John tried to manipulate my son, to get him up there and talk me out of being a rat," as jurors saw a photo of Michael DiLeonardo Jr. standing alongside Gotti at Ray Brook federal prison in upstate New York.

The younger DiLeonardo's visit to "Uncle John" took place in 2003. Gotti served time at Ray Brook from 1999 to 2004.

In addition to a new charge of witness tampering involving the teen-ager, Gotti is facing trial for the third time, charged with seven counts of racketeering conspiracy, racketeering, construction industry extortion and money laundering. Two earlier trials ended in hung juries.

Prosecutors claim that Gotti called the boy, who was 16 at the time, to the prison to coerce him into talking his father out of cooperating with the feds following the senior DiLeonardo's 2002 arrest on racketeering and murder charges.

"I thought it was a major breach on his part to do that to my son," DiLeonardo said. "That's my son. We don't play with people's families."

However, the younger DiLeonardo broke off with his father in 2000, after his parents' marriage ended when DiLeonardo Sr. fathered a child out of wedlock. Now 20, the young man changed his last name and lives in Tottenville with his mother.

DiLeonardo also repeated his testimony from the earlier trials that the bulk of his criminal activities took place on Staten Island, where he resided and funneled money from construction industry extortion through his company, Metropolitan Stone.

He again testified that he did "business" with Island natives Frank and Peter DiTommaso through their company, New Jersey-based Interstate Industrial Corp.

Claiming that Interstate had a "verbal contract" with the Gambinos, DiLeonardo said the DiTommasos paid the mob family $100,000 to keep a union foreman off a Staten Island job and save Interstate "a half-million dollars."

"They'd save money and we'd make money," DiLeonardo told jurors yesterday.

Reached by phone yesterday, Frank DiTommaso, who earlier denied DiLeonardo's allegations, declined comment on the latest testimony.

DiLeonardo also implicated Carmine Sciandra of Todt Hill, telling jurors that the reputed Gambino captain received kickbacks from Island-based Scara-Mix, a concrete company, and earned the Gambinos money extorted from the city garment industry.

Sciandra, co-owner of the Top Tomato stores, also gave $500 cash to Junior Gotti and his bride, Kimberly, according to a list of wedding gifts the couple received when they wed in April 1990.

In December, Sciandra was shot in the stomach and wounded in front of Top Tomato's Travis store by an ex-cop who reportedly sought vengeance for his teen-age daughter. The girl had accused Sciandra's brother, Sal -- her boss at the store -- of groping her.

The charges were dropped in April because Sciandra refused to cooperate with prosecutors.

DiLeonardo Sr. currently lives with his second wife and 6-year-old son in an undisclosed location and under new identities, in the federal witness protection program.

The trial resumes this morning with Gotti attorney Charles Carnesi beginning his cross-examination of DiLeonardo.

Pogo (or anyone else),

Do you know who DePalma was acting for? I've heard various things's, such as DePalma saying how he admired Gotti Sr. for making a capo in the late 1980s, I've heard he was made an official capo after Junior became acting boss, etc. Also, when he got out, who was he acting for (he told Garcia that he had regained his capo stripes, but in the indictment he is only listed as acting capo.

Chief: Probe of Hollywood cops halted early

More Hollywood police officers could have been trapped in an FBI undercover operation that landed four veteran officers in jail on an array of corruption charges, the chief says.

A two-year federal undercover probe that led to corruption charges against four Hollywood police officers was shut down prematurely after two of those officers learned they were under investigation, according to Hollywood Police Chief James Scarberry.

More officers are under suspicion, Scarberry said Friday.

The chief said he found out the investigation was blown Thursday -- hours before the FBI swooped in and arrested Officers Kevin Companion, Jeffry Courtney and Stephen Harrison. Officer Thomas Simcox, who is cooperating, was picked up a month ago, Scarberry said.

"We called the FBI immediately yesterday after we found out that Companion and Courtney were at the pension office. They both called in sick all week and were putting in their letters of resignation," Scarberry said.

Harrison was unaware of the investigation when he was arrested, Scarberry said.

Federal corruption charges against the officers include a range of criminal activity that includes extortion, bribe-taking, dealing in stolen property, protecting a crooked, high-stakes card game, cargo theft and transporting a multi-kilo load of heroin.

One officer allegedly used his marked police motorcycle to provide a security escort for what he thought was a shipment of $400,000 in proceeds from the sale of stolen diamonds, authorities said.

The officers face maximum sentences of life in prison and fines up to $4 million if convicted on the drug trafficking charges. In addition, they face up to 20 years for each alleged use of their police positions for extortion.

During the two-year probe by the U.S. attorney and the FBI -- dubbed "Tarnished Badge" -- undercover agents convinced the officers that they were members of a New York crime family.

LEADER OF THE GROUP

According to agents, Companion, 41 -- a sworn Hollywood officer for more than two decades -- was the leader of the group of crooked cops and recruited the others for illegal capers.

Many of the meetings between Companion and the agents were audiotaped and videotaped, revealing a veteran officer eager to use his badge for illegal profit.

In March 2005, Companion was videotaped meeting with agents at the Borgata Hotel in Atlantic City.

At that time, agents said they needed more officers and an unmarked police car to protect a large amount of cash collected from the sale of stolen diamonds.

Companion was interested and told them he knew of some "old-school" guys whom he could approach for assistance.

In exchange for cash, Companion and others protected the collection of illegal gambling debts and the fencing of stolen watches; they personally delivered $400,000 in bearer bonds and a tractor-trailer full of cigarettes; and they protected a rigged, high-stakes poker game on a yacht.

But the crimes they are accused of did not appear that lucrative, compared to the hefty pensions and retirement benefits that were at risk if the cops were caught.

At a press conference on Friday, U.S. attorney Alexander Acosta indicated that during the investigation, Companion received $42,000; Courtney, 51, received $22,000; Simcox, 50, received $16,000; and Harrison, 46, received $12,000.

"There is some indication from the FBI that other names were brought up in the investigation," Scarberry said. "They were officers they never met but were supposedly also available [to join the criminal scheme] if needed," he said.

TO REVIEW TAPES

Scarberry plans to review FBI video and audio tapes that might shed light on which other officers might have been involved, he said.

And an FBI press release confirmed the agency would continue to investigate, "targeting ongoing corruption within the Hollywood Police Department."

But that will be harder now that the investigation has been made public.

Scarberry said he knows how Courtney and Companion learned of the investigation, but he declined to discuss it.

"That's part of the FBI's investigation," he said.

A ranking federal law enforcement source said Scarberry and his assistant were the only outsiders taken into their confidence. They were told "in no uncertain terms" that they must not reveal what they knew, the source said.

But Scarberry immediately told City Manager Cameron Benson about the probe and revealed it to Hollywood Mayor Mara Giulianti a few days later.

"I think it is appropriate when something this big is happening I know about it," Benson said. "The chief has got to inform me because I am the boss and the mayor is my boss, and I have to let my bosses know."

UNAWARE OF ORDERS

Benson said he was unaware that Scarberry had been told by the FBI to keep quiet.

Federal agents decided to tell Scarberry about the investigation about a month ago as part of an attempt to get Simcox to flip and cooperate, the federal source said.

Simcox, accompanied by the chief, went to FBI headquarters on a ruse. It wasn't long before Simcox began implicating other officers, the source said.

When the FBI learned Thursday that the targets of their investigation had learned about it, agents moved in quickly.

But Giuliani said the FBI is to blame if there was a leak that limited the agency's chance of snaring more crooked cops.

``To pick up the guy and not follow through . . . is their fault. They put their trust in a criminal."

Courtney, Harrison and Companion appeared in federal court Friday morning and pleaded not guilty. An arraignment is scheduled for March 15.

This list includes people named in your acknowledgment section (except where an asterisks appears). We ask that you provide an acknowledgement, delete the person's name or use an alias because of the direct association made between the agent and their specific unit.

In addition, the following pages need amendments:

1. In Chapter 5, page 66, the end of the third sentence in the third paragraph that reads, "...I wanted to have a conversation with my partner..." Please delete the remaining portion of that sentence. Although the person is not named, anyone involved in the investigation/operation will know who the person is. We feel his identity should be protected.

2. In Chapter 6, page 76, the end of the first sentence in the first full paragraph. The portion of the sentence beginning with, "...I worked a series of cases that were known as..." Please remove the case names and Reynaldo Tarechi from this sentence. Although there is public information on Operation Reciprocity, the individual case names are not public knowledge. In addition, Mr. Tarechi has not provided authorization to release his identity. Please remove this name.

3. In Chapter 6, page 84, paragraph three, the third and fourth sentences. The information in these sentences reveals that Martin Manzo cooperated with the FBI in Operation Reciprocity. We need to confirm that his assistance in this case is public knowledge.

4. In Chapter 7, page 88, the first full sentence beginning with, "So FBI Special Agent Mario Tariche and Michael Anderson, along with..." This portion of the manuscript names an IRS agent who has not provided consent to release his name, therefore his privacy should be protected.

5. Also in Chapter 7, page 90, the last paragraph, please remove Reynaldo Tarechi's name, found at the end of the first sentence. The same reasoning provided in amendment # 2 still applies in this instance.

Hollywood's interim police chief to face rising crime

By JASMINE KRIPALANI

When Hollywood Police Chief James Scarberry retires next month, he'll be leaving a city with rising crime and a stigma of a corruption probe that sent four veteran officers to prison.

Hollywood's murder rate more than doubled in the first half of the year over last year, and other violent crime on the rise, according to figures the city reported to the Florida Department of Law Enforcement.

"I think that's true around the country," Scarberry said. "It's been a bad year for homicides, and a lot of them have been drug dealers and prostitutes on Federal Highway killing one another."

Hollywood officer receives two years' probation

By WANDA J. DeMARZO

A 23-year-veteran Hollywood police lieutenant will serve two years' probation, lose his pension and pay a $2 for lying to the FBI about an undercover police corruption probe.

Under a sentence imposed by U.S. District Judge Marcia Cooke, Lt. Charles Roberts also agreed on Wednesday to surrender his police badge. He is the fifth officer charged with a felony in connection with the two-year federal sting.

Roberts, 48, wasn't involved in the illicit activity, but was arrested in May after lying to authorities about leading the probe to other officers. He was charged with making a false statement.

Hollywood chief leaving scandal-ridden department

By WANDA J. DeMARZO AND TODD WRIGHT

Hollywood Police Chief James Scarberry, who narrowly survived one of the largest corruption scandals to hit department, announced Wednesday he intends to retire.

Scarberry, a former Miami Beach assistant chief, joined Hollywood eight years ago promising to help clean up whose officers had been accused of everything from bribery and losing evidence to trading favors with prost planting drugs on suspects.

Early in his tenure, he was widely credited with bringing stability to the department and neutralizing its powerful police union. Scarberry's departure, though, follows a federal investigation that toppled four veteran officers to the arrest of a top commander.

Hollywood major demoted for FBI probe leak

By WANDA J. DeMARZO

A top-ranking Hollywood police officer is being demoted for his role in impeding an FBI probe into corruption the agency.

Frank McGarry, a 25-year veteran of the department, has been demoted from major to lieutenant, and is losing $25,000 to $30,000 a year in pay, said city spokeswoman Raelin Storey.

McGarry also must forfeit 80 hours of accrued vacation leave and lose all benefits he received as part of the management team.

I hope that everyone has forwarded any concerns they have regarding Jack Garcia's book to me. We are moving forward with finalizing amendments for Mr. Garcia. Mr. Hardy and I would like to meet with anyone that has stated an objection/concern to have a discussion (provide us some clarity) to the issues at hand. Mr. Hardy is available after 2:30 pm on Monday, December 10th, and from 11 am-12 pm on Tuesday, December 11th. Who is available during these time frames? We need to complete our amendment letter next week.

Hi.

The OC Section is responding to the request from RMD to review former FBI Special Agent Garcia's book prior to approval for publication.

Attached is the Organized Crime Section's review of former FBI Special Agent Joaquin Garcia's book. The words/segments/portions that should be deleted are marked in blue. A follow-up explanation is provided in red. Since many references are made to undercover agents/undercover techniques and public corruption investigations, the OC Section is forwarding this document to USOU and the Public Corruption Section for review/comments. Also, the OC Section is providing a copy of its comments to OGC due to the mention of the ongoing Royal Charm and Smoking Dragon investigations mentioned throughout the book.

These are the primary issues: << File: Book Review.doc >>

1. Information not released to the public concerning the Royal Charm and Smoking Dragon investigations. As explained throughout the document, these are ongoing cases which involve current source activity, grand jury testimony, trial preparation, etc. Mr. Garcia's statements regarding the two cases identifies the true identity of undercover agents and provides information not released to the public.
2. Identification of former and current FBI Special Agents and identification of true name former and current Undercover Special Agents.
3. Identification of potential FBI sources
4. Identification of public corruption FBI investigations.

Let me know if anyone has any questions.

An ailing 74-year-old Gambino crime family captain who once recommended an undercover FBI agent for mob membership asked a judge for leniency Tuesday but received more than 12 years in prison instead.

"Give me one more shot," Gregory DePalma, who uses a wheelchair, asked U.S. District Judge Alvin K. Hellerstein, who presided over a trial in which DePalma was convicted of racketeering.

"If you were in my shoes," the judge replied, "I don't think you would."

"You gotta do what you gotta do, so let's do it," DePalma then grumbled shortly before he was sentenced to 12 years and seven months in prison for crimes he committed after he was freed from prison in early 2003.

12/10/2007

PREPUB-5724

When the judge rejected the Department of Probation's suggestion that DePalma receive less than the minimum of 12 years called for by sentencing guidelines and imposed the sentence, DePalma said, "I'll be dead maybe in about five."

The judge, calling DePalma "a man thoroughly immersed in criminal activity," said he could not be lenient because leniency toward DePalma in the past had not led him to avoid crime when he was out of prison.

DePalma was convicted June 6 by a jury in a case that featured the exploits of Joaquin Garcia, a rotund FBI agent who capped a career of disguises by posing as "Big Jack" Falcone.

DePalma believed Garcia's act enough that he recommended he be made a member of the crime family. Before that could happen, DePalma and 31 others were arrested.

DePalma's lawyers had protested the government's use of sophisticated bugging devices placed in their client's cellular telephone that enabled investigators to listen to conversations even when the telephone was off.

Lawyer John L. Pollok had accused the government of turning DePalma into a "human microphone" with the eavesdropping devices.

The judge said the government received proper approval from courts as it steadily increased the scope of its audio surveillance, trying to destroy the new leadership of the crime family during a three-year probe.

The ruling cleared the way for the government's use of parts of 5,000 hours of taped conversations showing DePalma working energetically from 2003 to 2005 extorting restaurants, construction companies and a Bronx topless nightclub, where he was introduced to the undercover agent.

DePalma once was photographed with Frank Sinatra and enjoyed exaggerating or boasting of his connections.

On tapes, DePalma described getting a former manager for Liza Minnelli to finance a $12,000 eight-day trip for mob wives to Las Vegas. Prosecutors called the man one of DePalma's victims.

At a trial in which DePalma used an oxygen tube in his nose, prosecutors made his health an issue, telling jurors he had boasted after a 1999 racketeering guilty plea that he had duped the judge with an illness act worthy of an Academy Award.

They played tapes of him bragging that he wore an oxygen mask and did not shave for a week before sentencing, leading the judge to say he had never sentenced a man so sick.

On Tuesday, DePalma told the judge he wanted to show prosecutors his swollen legs to prove how ill he remained from heart and lung problems.

The judge disallowed it, but he did engage DePalma in conversation in which both of them alluded to their military careers and talked about the perils of aging.

DePalma said the 72-year-old judge seemed in better health than he was, a fact the judge did not deny.

"Then again," the judge told DePalma, "I haven't lived your life."

Good Morning. I am [redacted] Coordinator of the Prepublication Review Office. My office's function is to review intended publications by current/former FBI employees to determine if the employee has included information obtained during FBI employment, which should not otherwise be released. Examples would be classified information, Rule 6e, sensitive techniques, pending investigations or prosecutions, personal privacy info, FBI information not available to the general public through means such as FOIPA, the media or court records, etc.

As is more common than not, it is necessary that we call upon FBI "subject matter experts" to review the submissions of current/former FBI employees as the subject matter at issue is beyond the general expertise of my employees. It is in that regard, that I am contacting you.

I am forwarding to you a copy of a manuscript written by Joaquin "Jack" Garcia entitled, "Making Jack Falcone", which I would like for you to assign to someone in your Unit for review. Since "Jack" was in very deep cover in this operation, we are being very cautious in our review prior to providing approval.

General Rules-We have 30 business days (from September 5, 2007) to respond to the author. If your review will require additional time, please advise in a timely manner so that we may advise the author of the necessity for a deadline extension. In addition, as the material is proprietary information, it is not to be disclosed/shared beyond those persons involved in the review process.

Please give me a call or email me if you have any questions.

Thank you.

Subject: Former FBI Special Agent Garcia - Book Review by OC Section

b6 -2

UNCLASSIFIED
NON-RECORD

Hi.

The OC Section is responding to the request from RMD to review former FBI Special Agent Garcia's book prior to approval for publication.

Attached is the Organized Crime Section's review of former FBI Special Agent Joaquin Garcia's book. The words/segments/portions that should be deleted are marked in blue. A follow-up explanation is provided in red. Since many references are made to undercover agents/undercover techniques and public corruption investigations, the OC Section is forwarding this document to USOU and the Public Corruption Section for review/comments. Also, the OC Section is providing a copy of its comments to OGC due to the mention of the ongoing Royal Charm and Smoking Dragon investigations mentioned throughout the book.

Book Review.doc
(724 KB)

These are the primary issues:

1. Information not released to the public concerning the Royal Charm and Smoking Dragon investigations. As explained throughout the document, these are ongoing cases which involve current source activity, grand jury testimony, trial preparation, etc. Mr. Garcia's statements regarding the two cases identifies the true identity of undercover agents and provides information not released to the public.
2. Identification of former and current FBI Special Agents and identification of true name former and current Undercover Special Agents.
3. Identification of potential FBI sources
4. Identification of public corruption FBI investigations.

Let me know if anyone has any questions.

An ailing 74-year-old Gambino crime family captain who once recommended an undercover FBI agent for mob membership asked a judge for leniency Tuesday but received more than 12 years in prison instead.

"Give me one more shot," Gregory DePalma, who uses a wheelchair, asked U.S. District Judge Alvin K. Hellerstein, who presided over a trial in which DePalma was convicted of racketeering.

"If you were in my shoes," the judge replied, "I don't think you would."

"You gotta do what you gotta do, so let's do it," DePalma then grumbled shortly before he was sentenced to 12 years and seven months in prison for crimes he committed after he was freed from prison in early 2003.

When the judge rejected the Department of Probation's suggestion that DePalma receive less than the minimum of 12 years called for by sentencing guidelines and imposed the sentence, DePalma said, "I'll be dead maybe in about five."

The judge, calling DePalma "a man thoroughly immersed in criminal activity," said he could not be lenient because leniency toward DePalma in the past had not led him to avoid crime when he was out of prison.

DePalma was convicted June 6 by a jury in a case that featured the exploits of Joaquin Garcia, a rotund FBI agent who capped a career of disguises by posing as "Big Jack" Falcone.

DePalma believed Garcia's act enough that he recommended he be made a member of the crime family. Before that could happen, DePalma and 31 others were arrested.

para 9

DePalma's lawyers had protested the government's use of sophisticated bugging devices placed in their client's cellular telephone that enabled investigators to listen to conversations even when the telephone was off.

para 10

Lawyer John L. Pollok had accused the government of turning DePalma into a "human microphone" with the eavesdropping devices.

para 11

The judge said the government received proper approval from courts as it steadily increased the scope of its audio surveillance, trying to destroy the new leadership of the crime family during a three-year probe.

para 12

The ruling cleared the way for the government's use of parts of 5,000 hours of taped conversations showing DePalma working energetically from 2003 to 2005 extorting restaurants, construction companies and a Bronx topless nightclub, where he was introduced to the undercover agent.

DePalma once was photographed with Frank Sinatra and enjoyed exaggerating or boasting of his connections.

On tapes, DePalma described getting a former manager for Liza Minnelli to finance a $12,000 eight-day trip for mob wives to Las Vegas. Prosecutors called the man one of DePalma's victims.

At a trial in which DePalma used an oxygen tube in his nose, prosecutors made his health an issue, telling jurors he had boasted after a 1999 racketeering guilty plea that he had duped the judge with an illness act worthy of an Academy Award.

They played tapes of him bragging that he wore an oxygen mask and did not shave for a week before sentencing, leading the judge to say he had never sentenced a man so sick.

On Tuesday, DePalma told the judge he wanted to show prosecutors his swollen legs to prove how ill he remained from heart and lung problems.

The judge disallowed it, but he did engage DePalma in conversation in which both of them alluded to their military careers and talked about the perils of aging.

DePalma said the 72-year-old judge seemed in better health than he was, a fact the judge did not deny.

"Then again," the judge told DePalma, "I haven't lived your life."

 Judge has no mercy for Gambino gabber!
Judge has no mercy for Gambino gabber

BY THOMAS ZAMBITO
DAILY NEWS STAFF WRITER

Gabby Gambino capo Greg DePalma had a few things to say before a Manhattan federal judge sentenced him to 12 years and seven months in prison on racketeering charges yesterday.
"Give me one more shot," DePalma said in asking for leniency.

"If you were in my shoes," Judge Alvin Hellerstein replied, "I don't think you would."

Hellerstein noted that DePalma, 74, had returned to a life of crime after pleading guilty to racketeering charges in 1999 and receiving a break at sentencing then.

DePalma, who in his salad days posed beside Frank Sinatra and fellow wiseguys for an infamous 1976 photo, was brought into court in a wheelchair, hooked up to an oxygen tank.

He has had a lung removed and suffers from a heart ailment that has left his legs swollen and cracked. Attorney John Meringolo asked that DePalma be allowed to show the judge his legs but was turned down.

"I'll be dead, maybe in about five [years]," DePalma predicted.

In addition to the prison time, Hellerstein ordered DePalma to pay some $70,000 in restitution to two extortion victims.

"How much?" DePalma asked. "Can I give them my Social Security check?"

DePalma's motor-mouth was intercepted by a bug the FBI placed in his cell phone with the help of undercover agent Joaquin Garcia, who so deeply infiltrated the mob that DePalma was ready to sponsor his Mafia induction.

Defense attorney Martin Geduldig told Hellerstein that his client could never again return to a life of crime because the recordings had implicated so many mobsters that DePalma's life was in jeopardy.

"Five thousand hours of recorded conversations had the effect of making him an informant for the FBI," Geduldig said. "He's put himself in a position where he can't go back to some of his old compatriots."

 PRISON IS MY DEATH!
PRISON IS MY DEATH
SENTENCE: MOBSTER

By KATI CORNELL

September 27, 2006 -- A judge slapped convicted Gambino boss Gregory DePalma with 121/2 years behind bars for racketeering - a prison term the sickly gangster said dooms him to die behind bars. "I'll be dead maybe in about five [years]," DePalma, 74, told Manhattan federal Judge Alvin Hellerstein yesterday.

Defense lawyer John Meringolo argued that the judge should cut DePalma a break and sentence him to 10 years - 31 months below the minimum under the guidelines - because of a host of health problems. The wheelchair-bound wiseguy suffers from heart failure and diabetes, and lost a lung to cancer.

Assistant U.S. Attorneys Christopher Conniff and Scott Marrah have accused DePalma of exaggerating his medical condition.

Yesterday, defense lawyer Martin Geduldig argued that one look at DePalma's legs would prove he is sick, describing the limbs as "swollen" and oozing pus.

In June, a Manhattan federal jury convicted DePalma on 27 of the 36 charges he faced, including extorting a former manager for Liza Minnelli.

"Give me one more shot," DePalma said, as the judge prepared to impose the 121/2-year sentence and $70,000 in restitution.

"If you were in my shoes, I don't think you would," Hellerstein replied, noting DePalma immediately returned to crime after serving an earlier prison term.

"You gotta do what you gotta do, so let's do it,"

New Rochelle neurologist asks federal judge to dismiss charges in Viagra case

By TIMOTHY O'CONNOR
THE JOURNAL NEWS

(Original publication: November 14, 2006)

A New Rochelle neurologist accused of helping a convicted Scarsdale mobster illegally distribute Viagra has asked a federal judge to dismiss all charges against him.

Lawyers for Dr. Stephen Klass filed papers in U.S. District Court in Manhattan charging that the government had no right to use the secretly recorded conversations of Gregory DePalma against the doctor, saying federal agents had no grounds to suspect the doctor of wrongdoing.

Federal prosecutors charge that Klass and two other prominent Westchester physicians handed out drug samples to the aging and ailing Gambino crime family capo. The doctors knew DePalma was illegally passing on the erectile dysfunction drugs to his mob buddies, prosecutors charge.

In exchange for the drugs, DePalma allegedly gave the doctors stolen merchandise like jewelry.

Dr. George Shapiro, a Scarsdale cardiologist, pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor count of illegally distributing drug samples. He was sentenced to a year of probation and fined $5,000.

Dr. Arlen Fleisher, a heart surgeon at Westchester Medical Center in Valhalla, was also charged. But federal prosecutors have agreed not to pursue a case against him.

DePalma, 74, was convicted of racketeering and other charges in June. He was sentenced to more than 12 years in prison. He was the lynchpin of a two-year investigation by the FBI's White Plains office into the Gambino family that eventually led to the arrests and convictions of 32 reputed leaders, members and associates of the crime family.

The doctors certainly weren't the original targets of the investigation. But like most everyone else charged in connection with the DePalma investigation, they were caught on FBI bugs planted in a cell phone given to the loquacious DePalma.

The legality of those bugs is at the center of Klass's attempts to have the judge toss out the charges against him.

Klass, a former medical president at Sound Shore Medical Center in New Rochelle, is an award-winning doctor who should be "approaching the zenith of his career," his lawyers, Edward A. McDonald and Matthew Lang wrote in court papers.

Instead, he finds himself a defendant in a mob case.

Klass has treated DePalma, who suffers from a host of chronic ailments, and his family members for years. Klass was instrumental in getting DePalma's son, Craig, discharged from a federal prison to a New Rochelle nursing home following a failed suicide attempt that left the younger DePalma in a coma.

Klass "quite properly" gave DePalma the drug samples, his lawyers said. But he never did so in exchange for any of DePalma's ill-gotten gains, McDonald and Lang said.

Klass also did not know that DePalma was passing the drugs along to others, according to his lawyers.

"The electronic communications show that Dr. Klass repeatedly sought to ensure that DePalma did not improperly distribute what Dr. Klass had given him," the lawyers wrote.

Federal prosecutors have until Dec. 22 to respond to Klass's motion to dismiss the charges.

 Teamster faces ban for tie to mobster
Teamster faces ban for tie to mobster

By TIMOTHY O'CONNOR

THE JOURNAL NEWS

(Original publication: December 3, 2006)

Contractors, doctors, and entertainment honchos have all felt the sting of palling around with convicted Scarsdale mobster Gregory DePalma.

Blue-collar workers can now be added to that list.

A court-empowered union watchdog panel is recommending that the International Brotherhood of Teamsters lodge charges against a Local 456 member from New Rochelle for associating with DePalma. If the charges of violating the union's constitution are upheld, Joseph Pirro could be banned for life from the Teamsters union.

Pirro enlisted DePalma's aid in trying to start his own recycling business and used his connection to DePalma to get his girlfriend a catering job at a Bronx strip club that was owned by a member of DePalma's crew, according to a 17-page report sent last week from the Independent Review Board to IBT President James Hoffa.

"The evidence showed that Pirro had knowing and purposeful contact with La Cosa Nostra member Gregory DePalma," the board wrote in the report.

Pirro joined Local 456 in October 2001. He was suspended by the 3,800-member local in July for not paying his union dues. Elmsford-based Local 456 has been in a running battle with the IRB for nearly a decade over allegations that the family of long-time president Edward Doyle Sr. ran the local primarily for their own benefit. In January 2003, the Teamsters took over the local after an IRB investigation leveled charges of nepotism and mismanagement against president Bernard Doyle, Edward Doyle Sr.'s brother.

But last year control returned to the Doyle family when Edward Doyle Jr. was elected president of the local that represents workers in the construction, delivery, and public service sectors of the Lower Hudson Valley. He did not return calls seeking comment on the allegations against Pirro.

Pirro's last known address is on Sylvan Place in New Rochelle. But he hasn't lived there in months, the daughter of his ex-girlfriend said Friday. Liz Berlingo said the trucking company her mother, Pam, and Pirro formed in 2003, J&P Transport, was defunct. She said the family hadn't seen him in more than two months, though his mail is still delivered to their home and his dogs are still at the house. She said she didn't know where he now lived or how to reach him.

In testimony before the IRB in April, Pirro admitted he knew DePalma was an organized crime figure. He testified that he was introduced to DePalma in 2003 by reputed Genovese associate Patrick Lombardo.

DePalma was arrested in March 2005 along with 31 other reputed leaders, members, and associates of the Gambino crime family following a two-year investigation by the FBI's White Plains office that centered on DePalma's crew. Prominent Westchester physicians and contractors were ensnared in the case. DePalma was caught on tape extorting Liza Minnelli's manager to pay for trips to Las Vegas for mobsters' wives. DePalma is now serving a 151-month sentence on a federal racketeering conviction.

Pirro used to take Pam Berlingo's home-cooked meals to DePalma at United Hebrew Geriatric Center in New Rochelle, where the Gambino Crime Family capo conducted mob business at the bedside of his comatose son, Craig, according to the IRB report. Pirro testified that he met with DePalma at least 20 times between 2003 and 2005.

Pirro told DePalma that Berlingo wanted to get into catering. DePalma got her a job catering at the Crazy Horse strip club in the Bronx for six months.

At the nursing home, the capo introduced Pirro to his friends. Pirro said he didn't ask who they were or what they did.

"I didn't want to know nothing," he testified.

Jack ---

As we discussed, please feel to disseminate as appropriate.

I, James A. Gagliano, [REDACTED] hereby give Joaquin "Jack" Garcia permission to use my name in his book, entitled, "The Making of Jack Falcone". Jack has indicated that he will be identifying me as having acted in an undercover capacity and will refer to me, historically speaking, as an undercover agent. As I am no longer working in a UC capacity and as my name has been previously released in discovery documents to defense attorneys representing clients I had worked in an undercover capacity against, I feel this disclosure is safe and appropriate and will not result in the release of information not already in the public domain.

Respectfully, James A. Gagliano

As you know or don't know, Jack Garcia is writing a book, entitled "Making Jack Falcone". Jack wants to acknowledge all of those that supported him in his undercover roles, which includes all of you. However, before he can publish your name in the book, which will be mostly in the acknowledgement section at the end of the book, he needs FBI authorization to publish your names. This can be accomplished by sending an email to [REDACTED] The e-mail should state the following: b6 -2

"I authorize Jack Garcia to use my name in his new book, "Making Jack Falcone".

Also, print your name at the end of the e-mail. Please copy me on your e-mail so I can inform Jack who is providing consent.

As you know or don't know, Jack Garcia is writing a book, entitled "Making Jack Falcone". Jack wants to acknowldge all of those that supported him in his undercover roles, which includes all of you. However, before he can publish your name in the book, which will be mostly in the acknowledgement section at the end of the book, he needs FBI authorization to publish your names. This can be accomplished by sending an email to [redacted]. The e-mail should state the following:

b6 -2

"I authorize Jack Garcia to use my name in his new book, "Making Jack Falcone".

Also, print your name at the end of the e-mail. Please copy me on your e-mail so I can inform Jack who is providing consent.

Cab executive charged in cocaine case

By JOAN FLEISCHMAN
And JAY DUCASSI
Herald Staff Writers

The general manager of one of Dade County's largest cab companies was released Wednesday on a $165,000 bond after his arrest for allegedly trying to sell 22 kilograms of cocaine to undercover FBI agents posing as drug dealers.

Donald Louis Metz, 54, a 12-year employee of Yellow Cab, was one of five men charged with conspiracy and possession with the intent to distribute cocaine.

The others are Carlos Victor Gonzalez, 31; John Henry Leeder, 31; Richard Elortegui, 33, and Jorge Manoh, 34.

A sixth man, Alberto Borrego, 43, was arrested Tuesday night, but prosecutors announced at a federal magistrate's hearing that there was not enough evidence to file charges against him.

A New Jersey car dealer, George Kaufman, 46, also was arrested by the FBI's Atlantic City office. He introduced agents to Metz, and promised that Metz could supply them with "a hundred kilos of coke at a time," said agent Dick Ross of the Atlantic City office.

The $675,000 deal, which took place at a trailer on the premises of Yellow Cab, 3775 NW 36th St., was arranged by Metz, according to court documents. The cocaine was stored in a Styrofoam cooler and a large duffel bag, and was tested by agents Thomas Zychowski and Richard Garcia, who posed as prospective buyers, the arrest affidavit said.

The trailer does not belong to Yellow Cab, according to Les Eisenberg, president of the cab company. Eisenberg, who spoke through his lawyer, Melvin Frankel, said it is owned by Master Motors, a cab leasing company at 3777 NW 36th St. Yellow Cab gives them "the use of space on the property," Frankel said.

Eisenberg said his company is not involved in drug trafficking.

"We are distressed by these events," Frankel said. "It really doesn't help the public image of the taxi industry, which Mr. Eisenberg has really fought to promote."

Gonzalez, a former employee of Yellow Cab, now owns Master Motors, said his lawyer, Theodore Klein, Leeder and Borrego work for him, said Miami FBI spokesman Paul Miller.

Elortegui and Manoh are cousins who said they are executives with trucking companies in Medley, Miller said.

Gonzalez and Elortegui were released on $500,000 each. Manoh posted $350,000 bond. Leeder remained in jail on $1 million bond awaiting a bond hearing.

Magistrate Peter Palermo scheduled arraignment in the case for Feb. 18.

Hi.

The OC Section is responding to the request from RMD to review former FBI Special Agent Garcia's book prior to approval for publication.

Attached is the Organized Crime Section's review of former FBI Special Agent Joaquin Garcia's book. The words/segments/portions that should be deleted are marked in blue. A follow-up explanation is provided in red. Since many references are made to undercover agents/undercover techniques and public corruption investigations, the OC Section is forwarding this document to USOU and the Public Corruption Section for review/comments. Also, the OC Section is providing a copy of its comments to OGC due to the mention of the ongoing Royal Charm and Smoking Dragon investigations mentioned throughout the book.

These are the primary issues:

1. Information not released to the public concerning the Royal Charm and Smoking Dragon investigations. As explained throughout the document, these are ongoing cases which involve current source activity, grand jury testimony, trial preparation, etc. Mr. Garcia's statements regarding the two cases identifies the true identity of undercover agents and provides information not released to the public.
2. Identification of former and current FBI Special Agents and identification of true name former and current Undercover Special Agents.
3. Identification of potential FBI sources
4. Identification of public corruption FBI investigations.

Let me know if anyone has any questions.
